

FAVORITE INCOMPLETE WISH

Chapter-1

"....and I blocked her."

This is how it all started. For whatsoever reason, just the next day of knowing her, texting her for the first time; I blocked her. It was that moment when I thought she is the most egoistic girl I have ever seen; I was so committed hating her and ensured, "Come on Ashok, you aren't talking to her." But who knew that the same girl would be so important to me after few months.

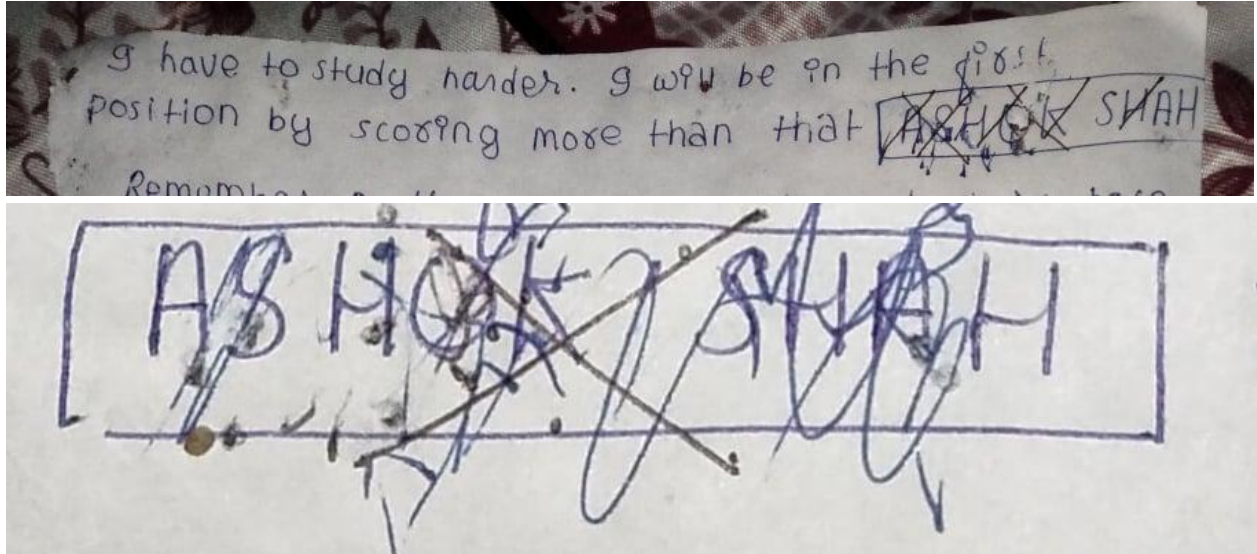

I bid bye to my school friends and was into college with new friends. I was freaking excited to share class with my new friends but sadly the pandemic hit my expectations and the classes were online. I couldn't meet my new friends but nevertheless I got to know some of them through Facebook. Well, the first step to friendship was so tough, I was so confused how do I start talking but the exchange of notes made it easier.

*Everything was going fine, I was making new friends, was enjoying talking to everyone, until the day I texted her. For some reasons, I texted her, I thought, "One more friend on way, wow" but it wasn't as expected. We didn't have a proper chat and I blocked her. Just the next day of having a chat with her, she was on my blocklist as I thought she was super-mean, super-rude and egoistic kind of girl so it was better for me to maintain a distance and this is how it all started.

Days passed, months passed and now the classes were physical. As the classes were going, I found out she was the topper from her school, and then the rivalry was on peak as I was also the topper of my school. We didn't talk to each other but still deep down, we truly were having unhealthy competition of beating each other. Few days later, I unblocked her from Facebook and the next day she texted me, we had a little of chats but that didn't change my perception towards her. There was always an ego clash between two of us. It was so extreme that I shared about her with my friends and told them,

"It doesn't matter to me if I become 2nd last student in the class if that girl becomes last."

And it was the time, we were onto the battlefield, OUR EXAMS !! We were done with the exams, I was a little nervous as I had heard that she was a very studious girl from her friends, I feared what if she beats me. I still remember, the result was on Saturday and a day prior, the teachers even gave a hint that there is a tight competition for 1st rank between Ashok and the same girl which literally scared me to infinity. Friday eve, and I was on Basketball court, I could see a teacher walking by. I asked him if he has idea about the result and he responded, "Congrats, you are the first student and you beat her by 2 marks", I was flying in my own world hearing that. My ego was on another level, I was going home with a smile. I was home, I changed and unlocked my phone, WHAT I SAW was a CONGRATULATIONS text from her. That made me happier, I had taste of victory and superiority. She was so furious with the result that she even wrote my name on a paper and scribbled, scratched it to shower all her anger. (image shown below)

But few days later, from somewhere, I heard that she had cried because of the result. This kind of made me regret a little and I somehow had a soft corner for her for that moment. But still, we were moving ahead with our own life, we barely talked.

11th was done but not the ego between us. 12th started and it was online again. I still remember, I kept my ego aside for a while and went to text her as it was her birthday. I wished her a very happy birthday and she too responded sweetly but soon she replied, "To be honest, I didn't expect you to wish me." This kind of hurt me but it was genuine of her thinking so as we were never nice to each other and always shared an egoistic bond.

But it was this day where everything changed, she said something that shook me; she would be the first one to wish me on my birthday, she promised. I wandered, we don't talk to each other neither we do have a good image for one another and still why she promised to wish first, why? This somehow changed my perception towards her. We were now having daily chats, and to some extent I was enjoying talking to her.

After few weeks, there arrived my birthday and it was her; the first one to wish me. Things completely turned around from then. I was out with my friends on my birthday but I couldn't stop thinking about her. I was waiting to get back home and text her, talk to her. I was slowly falling for her and I was unknown about it. I used to lighten up whenever I received a text from her. I personally was enjoying talking to her and even she was. We were having daily chats, late-night never-ending talks, we were really getting close to each other, we were falling for each other. The relationship usually has a date when they propose each other. But it wasn't that with me, neither of us have proposed each other, we understood our unsaid words and we didn't realize when it all happened. We were already in .

It was the time of vacation; she was at her hometown and so was I, but I desperately was waiting to meet her. Time truly changes, she was the one whom I literally ignored, hated a lot and now I was just hoping the days to pass by so that I could meet her. We still were talking to each other whenever we had time, there was no day when we didn't talk to each other, it was a daily routine. Finally, it was the day, we both were returning back to Kathmandu and my excitement level was somewhere in the sky. And then, we met....we met for the first time since the time we were in , I was nervous sharing the streets with her for the very first time, just her and me. But I was getting used to it as from no chats to daily talks to now we were meeting every day. I was enjoying every second of my life whenever she was with me whenever we walked along the streets. She never let the smile on my face fade away. We barely talked in the classroom so I used to wait for the day to pass by so that I could text her, talk to her, meet her. The days were getting as best as it could get. Every day with her was a new memory.

But pandemic hit us hard, the classes are closed and its again online now. She is back to her hometown, and I miss the walks with her but still the daily talks with her always brings a smile on my face. I hope the days pass by as soon as possible, I am waiting for the day to meet her, share the streets with her again.

I regret for the fact that I was judgmental too early, without properly knowing her I completely took her the wrong way. She was never rude, she was always sweet, she never was mean and egoistic but always kind and loving. I regret that I wasted more than a year not talking to her because of my undue ego. Nevertheless, I am thankful to my mind that it kept all the ego aside and moved forward to wish her as it was the time from which things started to change. I had never imagined the same girl whom I cursed during the start of session would be such an important part of my life. Being a part of her life for real makes me feel so blessed and for so many reasons, she is the one I would never dare to lose in my life.

 SERENITY

Chapter-2

"It isn't the end but we were never sharing the same class again."

I was waiting for the days to pass by as soon as possible so that I could meet her, share the streets with her again but the wait was so tough. Everyday seemed to be a week for me. But finally, it was the day, she was coming back to Kathmandu. I was literally so excited to meet her after so long; I remember, it was Saturday (probably 29th Magh). How could I not forget me being so punctual on that day. She had said that she would be here by 2-3pm. On the very day, I had planned out with my friends to celebrate one of their birthdays so I was a little scared, "What if we friend hangout for long and then I be late to meet her?" But still I managed to be on time, I was waiting for her in the college playground and now every second felt hours. I was sitting on a bench and there I see a teacher walking, he shouts "She came". And I just ran towards the gate. Had it been somewhere out I would surely have hugged her at the moment but within the college, didn't have that guts.

It was now eve and we planned to head out to Pashupati. It was after so long time that I was sharing the streets again with her and that really felt special. The day was going as best as it could ever get. We were there in Pashupati for so long; she, me and the silence that was all there I could feel. Having her so close next to me after so long was a different vibe. To put my head on her shoulder was back again. And now every hour was feeling like a second. Within a blink of an eye, the day passed. I wish the time had paused but it was what it was, we had to return back now. I wasn't feeling nice, I had waited to meet her for so long and when I met, the day passed. As we were walking, I stopped and hugged her which really made me know what serenity actually feels like.

*Now the classes too started and we were meeting daily. We spent a lot of times together. Looking at her and smiling during the class was truly one of the best vibes ever. The evening walks out with her, eating chatpateys and pani puris really always got me smiling. She was a part of my happiness. But then I started to change.....I suddenly started to stress a lot about career and family things, OVERTHINKING.

This really got me pensive and feel lonely over weeks. I wasn't talking to her nicely. Not only her, I was talking nicely to none. I shared everything what I was going through to her. I was scared how would she react but she didn't get me wrong, she was there with me. But still, I wasn't well to the fullest. My mood swings were at peak and I was hurting people close to me. There were times when I hurt her too, I made her feel bad. Even though she was so angry at me so many of the times, she never left. 🥰

"When you truly care for someone, their mistakes never change your feeling because it's the mind that gets angry but the heart still cares."

And she always made me feel this. When I felt I was losing people around me, she is the one there always with me. And I was fine sooner. Firstly, I was sorry for every of the hurts to her and thanked her for always being there with me. The person whom we need the most in life is undoubtedly the parents but it is not we can share everything to them, we need someone who could hear us and she is the one for me. And really thanks to her for making me smile and putting a blind trust on me.

The days were flying so fast and now we realized that end of the 12th grade was approaching nearer and nearer. We really share so common thoughts and views but that one different aim of our got me sad. She aimed of being of doctor and there was me; IT geek. So, it was never after the 12th class that we would be sharing class again. And that is why we were making every of our class times count. Talking to each other, being out in the gallery during breaks, being in the canteen after college and many more.....every day we were creating a new memory.

*And then, we bid bye to 2078 and were welcoming 2079. I really wanted my year to start spending time with her. And it was the first time we were going to watch a movie together. Being together for whole day, having her next to me, it really felt the best. Sadly, again the day ended with a blink of an eye but truly I could never have a perfect start than this to my year. And just around 6 days later, we again went to watch a movie and this time it was more special as she literally bunked her classes for the sake of watching movie with me, spending time with me. Remembering the day still brings smile on my face and that really felt, 'It's okay to be naughty sometimes.' And with this few days later, it was the last class of our 12th standard. This really made me feel low. It was the moment we were never sharing official classes again. And....I was never ready for this. The day was over, everyone was writing messages for each other on the shirts, and I was waiting for her, saving my frontside of shirt for her. And there she was...and I am never losing the shirt now.

She has given me so much to remember and cherish within this small time. I am taking a lot of memories out of here. It is sad that I will be missing the moments spent with her in the class. I will miss staring at her during classes, asking how's she whenever she kept her head down.

Well, end of 12th standard isn't the end of our bond. Yes, soon we will part ways to our aim. On one hand she will move ahead to be a doctor and me a Computer Engineer but it really won't be the end. We have been creating a book, and 12th class is just a chapter of the book. We will now be ending this chapter to create a new chapter.

It is not the end but probably the beginning to forever. ♡

Chapter-3

But slowly things started to change, we changed !!

We ended a beautiful chapter, a chapter which was all about creating memories being in the same class. This is what life is, I never wanted to accept this situation but I HAD NO OPTION. I had to accept that I was now never in the same class with her. Time passed and in a month, we finished our board exams and.....AND, she was going her home back. Again, I didn't want to accept this but I HAD TO. I still remember, having an argument with her just a day before she was leaving for home. But the best part between us was, arguments always got us closer. The next day, I met her early morning and just few minutes before she was leaving; she promised me to return within 10 days and she went.....

Again, the days were passing as slow as it could ever get. Moreover, she said she would be unable to return within 10 days that got me sad. I really didn't enjoy even a day here and sooner I too went my home. The only reason me going my hometown, Janakpur was, to get engaged and pass my days. But things seemed tough there as it was very hard for me to manage time to talk to her so I returned back to Kathmandu. And finally after few days, she was here....(probably 16th Asadh).

I was so happy realizing, YES, NOW I CAN SPEND TIME WITH HER. Now the days started going in a similar schedule, she joined NAME classes for her medical preparation and me interned somewhere but still we were making each and every day count. We always made time for each other out of our busy schedules....and things have been going smooth and same till now. (FORGOT THE DATE)

OH WAIT, TILL NOW? Yes...till now!!

AS THINGS STARTED TO CHANGE....

So, what actually changed?

With the time, we both felt, we weren't the same again for each other. We never put the same effort we used to as in the earlier phase of the bond. Things didn't feel that special; arguments and misunderstandings were getting at peak and it felt things aren't now same like before, not with just one or two but it felt with plenty of instances. It was not just her or just me but both of us changed. The days were getting tougher and tougher. And with all these, we barely talked nicely to each other but we talked...and even till date there has been no day when we didn't talk to each other since the day we started talking. What I feel where things went wrong was, we started comparing our PRESENT and PAST.

When we just started talking, we always showed the best out of ourself, we both were diplomatic with our reasonings...but as we talked, we started having a comfort where we expressed all our feelings impulsively. When we were always sweet to each other at the beginning, we now started to express our sadness, angriness without thinking twice. We were just expressing more out of ourself in a wrong manner rather than keeping things within self as in before. She never got angry at me, 0 mood swings, always calm when we started to talk. And ever since then, I cannot count her angriness, mood swings on my fingers, she started getting angry for small of the reasons and when I was with that, I could say nothing....so I felt,

Yes! She changed.

Neither was I, the stable one, showing myself an understanding one for so many months, later I too started being a little possessive which she always disliked. I was always the one who listened to her when she felt bad but nowadays, I started to put myself ahead, proving myself right even when she was feeling bad. I was the same guy who had promised, no matter what I would listen to her whenever she felt bad but I wasn't the same person with my words now.

We both didn't apologize for how we treated each other but just blamed for being changed.

So, WERE WE NOW CUTTING OFF THE BOND?

Definitely NOT!!

We were and are still together...!!

I had read somewhere that, "Both the person in relationship can't love each other equally: one person will definitely sacrifice more, give more than he or she gets."

I never know who the one was between two of us but it was definitely this, that always got us together and will in the days to come hopefully. What I feel is, it was never worthy comparing the present and past unless it goes drastically changed in the actions made by the one. It is always a human nature than everyone will be a little nicer in the early times, a little more conscious with their first impression but with the time that part will actually fade away but...the love shall never. Yes, I changed, yes, she changed but the change was just with how we were reacting but the love and care for each other always is the same.

The vibe you get when s/he hold your hand for 20th time will never match up the vibe you felt when s/he first touched you. The first meet will always hit different, the first walk will always be in a special corner of heart even after going out several walks ever after...isn't it?

"The first..." will always hold a different vibe and when we seek for the same vibe time and again, it is where we feel things aren't special, things have changed and that is where the bond loses. With the time, you get used to with the things and just stop expressing love but not stop loving.

And that is where, she has always been with me. When I felt she stopped loving me the same, it was more she just stopped expressing but always love me the same. There had been times where I felt I lost her but she never went. And I can't ever afford to lose her, losing her I would lose myself, my soul mate, my best friend, my go to person and everything.

You cannot share everything to your family, there are things where age-gaps comes into play, there are things which you cannot talk to everyone with but there is she for me with whom I have always been free to share. And my girl, please hear out me like every time you do. And I promise you, the affection between us will always remain the same. It is never what we feel for each other will ever change.....!!

I know this is not going to be easy. We surely will have misunderstandings, arguments but we surely will have the bestest of the time together. We both might not make out time as we used to before because we both have been moving on with our studies and going on without talking will definitely be hard but we are going to do this every day so that we can securely have each other in future. No matter what we go through, we will always believe in the love and affection we have for each other which shall always overshadow any hard times. And at the end, we will make it to forever.....!!

THANK YOU FOR EVERY OF THE SMILES <3

Chapter-4

THE FINAL CHAPTER?

Let's start from where we left from chapter 3!!

After fighting with the changes, we finally were back on track, we earned our love back again!!

We again started to live the best days of ours, we were again creating the memories which will never detach from both the souls. The days were passing by, she was preparing for medical studies and I was too engaged in self-study. But as the days were passing by, there was something that was making both of our blood run cold.

So, WHAT WAS THAT?

-> The fear of DISTANCE

The destiny sometimes has really been cruel to us. Whenever we were getting emotionally connected, whenever we needed each other the most, it was the distance that always came in between us. It was nothing different this time too. Probably, I was living in the best moment ever with her. Well, how can I not talk of her birthday? The day when we started to talk, the day where everything between us started. I did everything I could do for her to make her happy on that day.

How can I forget my birthday? How emotional was it for me, the effort she kept to make my day special?

But wait, where is the distance?

It was on the way. Sooner, it was the Dashain vacation knocking the door. Her NAME classes were now on the way to get called off. The last day of her NAME class, she was packing her books with tears. "Soon, I have to go far from Ashok", said her heart and tears rolled out from her eye. I was dropping her for the last time to the NAME classes. I still remember, we didn't have much to say for the 30 minutes' walk as both of the heart were heavy. We reached the NAME institute, and as she was going to the class I wandered, "Only if I could stop time when I am with her." I was heading back to my room and what she is unknown of till now is, that 30 minutes of walk from NAME to my home alone was full of tears.

The days passed and now, it was the time she was going back to her hometown. There was a time, I had hugged her crying with the fear one day she will have to go. I just didn't cry, I SOBBED HUGGING HER and it wasn't the first time. But as she was going, now, I had to pretend to be strong for a reason that she doesn't feel weak seeing me break in her absence.

Before she left, she pampered me that really touched my soul. A gentle hug, and then having her hands on my cheeks,

"Please don't cry Ashok, I will be back soon. Please be strong....."

That was one of the toughest days I could ever live. I was waiting for her to reach home and text me back. And finally, around 8-9 pm she texted me. We talked, we talked well!! But now she was in her home, and in addition it was the time of festivals. But despite of every of these, she always made time for me. She wasn't present alongside me but I never ever felt her absence. How blessed feeling was it having someone who was sacrificing all her works, even her study hour at some point just to talk to me, JUST ME!!

BUT, IT DIDN'T LAST LONG!!

It didn't last long? What? She sacrificing her time to talk to me....?? NO!!

She always made her time for me but now again it was more of misunderstandings and arguments rather than the love. It was neither her fault nor mine but more a clash of expectations and efforts. This continued for really so so long. And this really changed so much of things.

When we had to bridge the gap, the destiny brought a new turn. I now had to start my bachelor studies.

Does it have any role to play?

YES!! It was now the time; I was in a class where she wasn't. It was now the time, we were already in a different class, NEVER WERE NOW GOING TO BE IN THE SAME ONE!!

I, one of the most talkative, extrovert guy one would ever see was the most silent and alone guy in the class only because she wasn't in the same class. But, with all these loves we both failed to express and make each other feel loved. I was losing myself for so many reasons.

How drastically the things changed, if you read the first three chapters, every time she returned from her home, I was always excited to meet her, met her the very first day she came back. But this time, she came back and I wasn't the first one to know that she is returning back to Kathmandu. We didn't even meet for the next 4-5 days even she was already back here in Kathmandu although it had been almost 4 months we met. After 4-5 days, we then planned to meet, and we finally met. I really was so heavy and wanted to burst in her arms crying, letting her know that this is really tough, I want to make things work between us again but I didn't have enough guts to do so.

And soon after meeting, it was time for her to go back hostel and I left for my home. There was at least a matter of sigh after meeting her, that very night, we again argued, we again had a fight, she ended up saying, "Today too, I really had so much of expectations meeting you, but I didn't get the same vibe."

There have been some of the times where she has been so harsh to me with her anger, with her words, with her actions. But I was too not the ideal one. And the days have been going the same. We barely talk to each other nicely and neither give a proper time. It really feels I am losing of what was with me over this 1.5 year of time, and it is really tough.

My biggest flex till 26th February, 2023 WAS there is no day that I didn't exchange text with her at least once a day. No matter how the tough situation was, we always talked but this wasn't the same now. Even at this point, I am not trying to text her much, put an effort to talk only for a reason that 2 days later, she has her CEE exam. I don't want to put up other argument and distract her. I already have been her disturbance quite a few times, times when we both put up a fight and then with a mental disturbance, no one can concentrate on studies. So, maybe for now, I am better far from her.

I have no clue if I even hold the relationship with her, I have no idea if she even wants to talk to me or wants to meet me. What's now tough is, she will go back home after 2-3 days. Will I even get to meet her? Or the last time I SAW (not met) her, 3rd March, 2023 is the last when I saw her? If we go separate ways, I want you to know that you will always have a special place in my heart. Even though we may never see each other again, I will always cherish the memories we shared.

I am clueless of everything, no idea if the forever we shared with each other was for the memories or us. Maybe she doesn't want me back anymore because I am not the same to her anymore, maybe I changed and maybe she is deeply attached to who and how I was, not who and how I am.

Maybe, this is the final chapter or maybe it's not. I am sorry but she will read this chapter only if the next chapter exists so let's see if life gives me, she, back again. And if it is the last one, she was never the one who ruined anything neither I was the only one. It was the situation that won over us.

Situation? The situation here isn't about distance or those endless misunderstandings. It's about something else; something that is written in the final line of this story.

But I am sure that both of us will remain as one another's beautiful part for the memories we have created over the time. The time we spent together shall never ever be replaced or be a part of any regrets. I will always cherish the moments we spent together.

If we really parted ways, she will still always have a special place in my heart. I am grateful for the memories we shared and the love we once had. I MAY or MAY NOT have lost her as my partner, but I will never lose the love and respect I have for her as a person. The love I have for her will never fade. She will always be a part of my life, and I will always be grateful for the love we shared. She will forever be a part of my story. And for now, I don't know if we are still together or we broke up. 😊

So, did we end? Was this the last chapter?

=====

Updated: May 10th, 2023!!

Yes, we ended and it's been almost a month!! We met on 9th of March, maybe for the very last time. It was the time I was never ready for; she was now going back to her hometown.

It seemed we were losing our bond as every day passed by. And that one very day, she confessed that we weren't in relationship anymore.

What made it all happen?

Yes, we could count the distance, the misunderstandings and several other stuffs that created a gap between us. But this really wasn't new to us. We faced this in the third chapter of our story too then why did we have to end the bond even though we really didn't want to end. The love never faded away but I had to let her go. Maybe that's what the situation really was not the misunderstandings, not the distance, but something unspoken... written in the last line of this story.

How tough is to be in love with someone whom you know you cannot have in the future but the past with her presence is so beautiful present ever that makes you smile even in their absence. Now, she was not my present but always on my mind. Yes, we did stop talking but I really cannot deny that I don't miss you now. We always talked of being together forever but maybe the forever was not for us but the memories we created and now, I had to accept her as my favorite incomplete wish. And every night before I fall asleep, I question myself;

WHY DID WE HAVE TO CHOOSE BETWEEN FAMILY AND LOVE?

